BREAKSHARK BATTLECARD · CONFIDENTIAL · JULY 2026

"HOW ARE YOU DIFFERENT FROM TAIV?"

The immediate answer for investors and customers — built from Taiv's own website, contract, pricing, and case studies (all cited, all fetched July 11, 2026).

Their CEO, on camera: in a Marketecture "Justify Your Existence" interview (public on YouTube), Taiv CEO Noah Palansky says the one house-ad slot bars get (of six) produces a 3–5% lift in sales. Read that as an investor: one-sixth of the break time already moves sales 3–5%. BreakShark gives the venue all six slots — the incumbent's own founder just testified to the value engine we sell pure. (Same interview: ~500 bars and 30 employees at time of recording; no pricing disclosed — consistent with quote-only secrecy on their paid tiers.)

THE PER-SLOT MATH — ONE SLOT = 3–5%, WE GIVE ALL SIX

SLOTS RUNNING THE VENUE'S OWN PROMOS	WHO THAT IS	STATED / MEASURED SELF-PROMO LIFT
1 of 6	Taiv free plan (their CEO's own example)	3–5% (CEO, on camera)
>1 of 6	Taiv's fullest published venue case study (Fionn MacCool's)	6.5% food & drink
6 of 6	BreakShark — every venue, day one, $199/mo	Whole engine — 6.5% is their measured floor, not a ceiling

Say it honestly: the 3–5% is their CEO on a single slot; the 6.5% is their published multi-slot venue result. Do not claim 6×3–5%. The line is: "one slot already moves sales

3–5% by their own founder's admission — we hand the venue all six, and their own fullest case study (6.5%) is the floor of what that can do."

THE 30-SECOND ANSWER

Same moment, opposite business. Taiv is an ad network: their customer is Pepsi, Bacardi, BMW, and the sportsbooks — your bar is the inventory, and you get 1 of 6 ad slots plus roughly $1–2K a year for renting out your room. BreakShark is a venue tool: you are the customer, every one of the 6 slots sells your menu, and you keep 100% of the upside — which their own case study pegs at a 6.5% lift in food & drink sales. They monetize your breaks for advertisers. We hand your breaks back to you.

SAME TECHNOLOGY MOMENT, OPPOSITE BUSINESS MODEL

	TAIV	BREAKSHARK
Who is the customer	The advertiser (Pepsi, Bacardi, BMW, Figure, sportsbooks). Venue demographics are packaged and sold to media buyers.	The venue. Nobody else pays us, so nobody else's interests compete with yours.
What fills the break	Free plan: 1 of 6 slots yours; Taiv sells the other 5. "Almost exclusively" your content requires a paid upgrade (their FAQ's words).	All 6 slots, your promos, every break, from day one.
Revenue model	Sells your break time; pays you a 15% share — their calculator: ~$26/screen/month.	Simple SaaS ($99–199/mo). Your upside isn't a rev share — it's your own register.
The economics	~$1–2K/yr payout ("up to $6K" in their best-case claim).	6.5% lift (their case study) = $65K/yr. Even for a $1M venue		1% = $10K vs $2,388 cost.

Ads you didn't choose	Sports betting, alcohol brands, national chains. Blocklists are "best-effort... no guarantees" (their contract, §1.9).	Never. There are no third-party ads to block.
Sales motion	Sales-qualified funnel, technician install, "live within 30 days," enterprise contracts for full control.	Self-serve, minutes to set up, built for the single-location independent Taiv's model under-serves.

WHAT THEIR VENUE CONTRACT ACTUALLY SAYS

Taiv's own published restaurant terms (taiv.tv/restaurant-terms, updated March 25, 2026 — governed by Manitoba, Canada law):

> "Taiv makes no guarantees or warranties regarding the frequency or accuracy of ad space provided for House Ads."
> §1.8 — the venue's own promo slot is contractually best-effort. The ONE thing the bar gets isn't guaranteed.

> "...for a period of two (2) years following termination... the Business shall not install, operate, or permit the use of any product or service that directly competes with Taiv..."
> §4.2 — a 2-year non-compete on the bar's own TVs, surviving after they quit.

> Revenue share paid "within 120 days" of Taiv being paid; on termination, accrued unpaid revenue "shall be forfeited."
> §2, §3.4 — up to 4 months' payment lag, and cancelling forfeits what's accrued.

- Venue must run Taiv on the TVs with the "highest total viewability" (§1.6) — their advertisers get your best screens, by contract.
- Disconnecting equipment without Taiv's written approval can trigger a $150/hr service fee (§1.4); $350 per box if damaged/lost (§1.7); 30-day "Advertiser Buffer Period" of forced ad-running after you cancel (§3.1).
- Venue must share guest counts and demographics "as requested" (§4.1); POS data licensed to Taiv royalty-free (§1.11).

BreakShark's contrast in one line: our customers get a subscription they can cancel, promos that are guaranteed to run (that's the whole product), no non-compete, no data license, and no one else's brands on their screens. Sales note: target never-Taiv venues first — their 2-year post-exit non-compete makes current Taiv venues slow to unwind.

WHAT THEIR PAID PLANS MUST COST — THE FLOOR MODEL

Taiv doesn't publish Premium/Enterprise pricing ("contact us" only; no quotes have surfaced publicly). But their own numbers bracket it: the 15% rev share paying venues $1–2K/yr means Taiv grosses ~$556–$1,111/mo per venue selling ads in the 5 slots it keeps. An upgrade is Taiv selling back its own ad inventory — so the price must at least cover what they forfeit:

WHAT THE VENUE GETS	TAIV'S ECONOMIC FLOOR (ESTIMATE)	BREAKSHARK
Premium — 3 of 6 slots (half your breaks)	~$220–$445/mo	—
Enterprise — all 6 slots	~$556–$1,111/mo	$199/mo flat, all 6, day one
Enterprise at a high-traffic venue (their "up to $6K/yr" payout tier)	up to ~$3,300/mo	still $199/mo

Cross-check via their revenue calculator (~$26/screen/mo payout, 6-screen bar): Premium floor ≈ $415/mo, Enterprise ≈ $1,040/mo. The only venue-paid price Taiv ever stated publicly: "usually a few hundred bucks a month" (CEO Noah Palansky, TechCrunch, Mar 16, 2020, under their original paid model). Their "Implementation Fee" is also deal-specific, set on the contract cover page and deducted from the venue's rev share.

Label honestly: the floor figures are DERIVED ESTIMATES from Taiv's published rev-share math — not their actual quotes. Say "their own math says it must cost at least..." — never present these as their price sheet.

The line for a bar owner: "To get from them what we hand you for $199, their own math says you'd pay somewhere between $550 and $1,100 a month — because every slot they give back to you is ad money they can't sell. We don't have that problem. We never sold your breaks in the first place."

THEIR CASE STUDIES TELL YOU WHO THE CUSTOMER IS

Every case study on taiv.tv/case-studies is an advertiser win — there is no published venue-revenue case study on that page:

- Bacardi: +287% sales — and a 28% decrease in Captain Morgan sales inside the venues. A third-party brand paid Taiv to change what patrons order at the bar — over whatever the bar's own margins and distributor deals favored.
- Pepsi: "100% impression delivery," ads played 4,400 times per location per day.
- BMW: bought its way into NBA-adjacent airtime it lost to Kia — $8.50 CPM on the bars' screens.

The one pro-venue result they publish — Fionn MacCool's +6.5% food & drink sales, +14.8% Guinness pours, +70% event turnout — came from the venue's own promos. That number is BreakShark's entire thesis, measured by our biggest competitor.

OBJECTION HANDLING

"Taiv is free and pays me. You cost $199/mo."

Free means your screens work for their advertisers. The payout is ~$26/screen/month by their own calculator; your promos get 1 slot in 6, on a best-effort basis. Their own case study says self-promotion lifts food & drink sales 6.5% — that's $65K a year in a $1M room. You're choosing between ~$1,500 of rent and tens of thousands in extra orders. $199/mo is the cheapest employee you'll ever hire.

"Taiv has 5,000+ venues and just raised $13M. Why would I bet on you?"

Their scale is our market proof: bars install boxes to control breaks, and self-promos lift sales. But their $13M was raised to grow an ad network — every promise to an advertiser (Pepsi got "100% impression delivery") is a claim on venue screens. We don't have advertisers to protect, so we can give every venue what Taiv only sells to enterprise chains: all six slots.

"Can't Taiv just copy you?"

They already sell it — as their top-tier enterprise plan, priced "contact us," for multi-location groups. Offering 100% of slots to every corner bar for $199/mo would cannibalize the ad inventory their investors just funded. Structurally, they can only follow us by shrinking their own revenue. That's the moat: not the feature, the business model.

"Taiv's paid plan already does 'your own content.'"

Their FAQ's exact words: "almost exclusively." Still their ads in the mix, still the 2-year non-compete, still best-effort house-ad guarantees, still your data licensed to them. "Almost yours" is the strongest admission in this market that bars want what we sell: actually yours.

"They're free — why wouldn't I just try Taiv first?"

Because trying them first is the irreversible choice. Their contract bans you from using any competing break-takeover service for two years after you cancel (§4.2) — try them, hate it, and you're legally benched from alternatives until 2+ years from now. BreakShark is the reversible choice: no non-compete, cancel anytime, keep every option open. A company that needs a two-year leash on ex-customers is telling you it doesn't believe they'd stay by choice. Try us first — you risk nothing.

"You're a pre-launch startup."

Correct — which is why the founding 10 get first-month-free, price-locked-for-life, and a founder's cell number. We're not asking anyone to believe our numbers; we're asking them to believe Taiv's, and keep the upside themselves. The 10-bar pilot will publish our own.

QUESTIONS TO HAND A BAR OWNER WHO'S TALKING TO TAIV

- Is my own promo slot guaranteed in writing — or best-effort? (§1.8 says best-effort.)
- When do I actually get paid? (§2: up to 120 days after they're paid.)

- What happens to money I've earned if I cancel? (§3.4: forfeited.)
- Can I unplug the box in my own building without written approval? (§1.4: that can cost $150/hr.)
- What am I not allowed to install for 2 years after I quit? (§4.2.)
- Can a liquor brand pay you to cut sales of a product I pour? (Ask them about the Bacardi case study.)

FOR INVESTORS: WHAT TAIV'S EXISTENCE PROVES

- Market headroom is ~96%+: US venues with TVs running ≈ 150K–200K (core live-sports niche 80K–160K). Taiv's 5–6K venues = roughly 3–4% penetration, concentrated in a handful of metros (started Miami). BreakShark's break-even is ~105 venues — about 0.1% of the untouched market. Their growth (~500 bars at the Sept-2023-era interview → 5,000+ at the Feb 2026 raise, ~10× in ~18 months) is a CATEGORY adoption curve, not a market ceiling.
- Category validated: ~5,000+ venues (their Feb 2026 funding post; marketing pages claim 6,000+), 99% claimed monthly renewal, YC + $13M Series A+ (F
